Gifts of Charitable Remainder Trusts

Through a Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) you can enjoy tax savings today and a large cash flow for a number of years while also making sure that a sizable future donation is made to the Health Sciences Centre Foundation Inc.

How does a Charitable Remainder Trust work?

- You transfer certain property (such as cash, bonds, mutual funds or securities) to a trust where it is held and managed by a trustee (often an institutional or professional trustee). The trustee then invests and manages the funds.
- The net income earned by the trust funds will be paid to you, or any other person chosen by you. The principal funds donated by you remain in the trust and cannot be touched.
- When the trust ends – usually upon your death or after a fixed number of years – the remaining investment money is donated to the Health Sciences Centre Foundation Inc.
- The donation receipt is prepared at the time the trust is established. The receipt amount is the value of today's gift in future dollars that the Health Sciences Centre Foundation Inc. will receive when the trust arrangement ends. The tax credit may be claimed in the year the trust is set up and part or all of it may be carried forward for five years.

How does a Charitable Remainder Trust benefit you?

- You receive a donation receipt in the year you establish the trust. This receipt will help reduce the tax you pay in that year, and possibly for up to five following years.
- The Trust will pay income to you, for as long as you choose under the trust agreement. (A portion of that investment income will be taxable.)

- A CRT (Charitable Remainder Trust) removes the donated property from your estate, thereby eliminating fees on those funds and guaranteeing your privacy. In other words, property held in a CRT does not form part of your estate on death, therefore avoiding probate and potential administrative or professional fees.

What else should you consider?

- Charitable Remainder Trusts work best for donors who are at least 70 years old. This is because the value used for your tax receipt will be higher in this age bracket.
- A CRT is of particular interest to people of high net worth, are in a high marginal tax bracket and who have the ability to donate significant assets. Because there is no ability for the donor to receive additional income from the original funds used to set up the trust, the donor must have other sources to rely on in the event that income from the CRT is no longer enough. Trusts are subject to professional set-up fees and annual administration costs.
- CRTs are irrevocable (permanent) and legally-binding. Consult your legal and financial advisors for advice regarding the creation of a Charitable Remainder Trust.
